

Deutscher Bundestag

To the German People

A journey through parliamentary history from the Reichstag to the Bundestag.

A multifaceted installation of film, light and sound from 27 June to 3 October 2013 starting when it gets dark

Welcome to the film and light show at the German Bundestag

To the German People

A journey through parliamentary history from the Reichstag to the Bundestag.

Come with us on a journey through Germany's past and present. Watch an evocative film about unforgettable moments in history, the path to parliamentary democracy in Germany and its significance. Each evening from 27 June to 3 October 2013, starting when it gets dark, the German Bundestag will be showing a multifaceted installation consisting of film, light and sound effects projected against the facade of the Marie-Elisabeth Lüders Building.

Join us for this multimedia journey through German history!

The film lasts around 30 minutes, and there will be two back-to-back screenings.

The show can be watched free of charge.

And this is what awaits you:

The film explores the close links between the Reichstag building and the highs and lows of German parliamentary history.

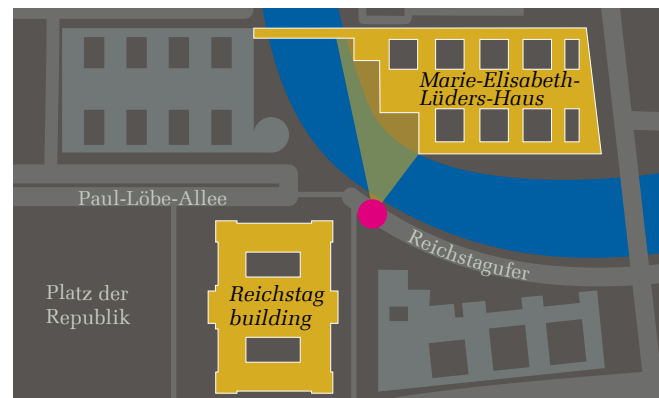

Beginning with the imperial period at the end of the nineteenth century, the film will take you on a journey that touches on the development of parliamentarianism during the Weimar era, includes Germany's darkest hours after the Nazis took power and examines the decades when Germany was divided and reunification, taking you right up to the present day.

The film shows the construction, destruction, repair, wrapping and reconstruction of the Reichstag building and its final reincarnation at the end of the 1990s as the seat of the parliament of reunified Germany.

This journey through the past 130 years shows that the way in which the Reichstag building is used has always been a reflection of the state of German democracy.
